

Contents

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

ix

INTRODUCTION

The Power and Fragility of European Science in the Spanish Atlantic World

3

PART I.

Andean, Atlantic, and Imperial Networks of Knowledge

1. Quina as a Medicament from the Andean World

23

2. Quina as a Product of the Atlantic World

43

3. Quina as a Natural Resource for the Spanish Empire

69

PART II

The Rule of the Local and the Rise of the Botanists

4. Loja's Bark Collectors, the King's Pharmacists, and the Search for the Best Bark

91

5. Botanists as the Empire's New Experts in Madrid

110

6. Imperial Reform, Local Knowledge, and the Limits of Botany in the Andean World

130

7. *Regalist and Mercantilist Visions of Empire
in the "War of the Quinas"*

151

CONCLUSION

- The Natures of Empire before the "Drapery" of Modern Science*

176

NOTES

187

BIBLIOGRAPHY

253

INDEX

275